Study Group Led by Margaret Bartley

Sunday, July 20 3 – 5 pm – Introductory session

Free for members, $5 for non-members.

Researchers and archeologists have been coming up with evidence that the story of Humanity is much older and more complex than our academics would have us believe. There are many books in our library, and many more not yet in our library, that discuss and reveal this evidence.

Join us for a different kind of book club.

In this first session, we will discuss the interests of the participants, and select the books we want to read. These can be new books, or old classics that you've always meant to read, but have not got around to reading.

In this group, we do not expect everyone to have read the material ahead of time. The people who have read the book will relay the book's information as well as they can, correcting and prompting each other to build a picture for those who have not read it, or who were confused. This is a good way to handle complex information. It helps the people who have read the book to retain and understand the material better, and of course for the people who have not read the books, it is nice to be able to get the material from the people who have.
