History Redux

A Book Club Focused on Ancient Civilizations and Forgotten History

Monday, February 1, 2016, 7 – 8:30 pm

Free for members, $5 for non-members.

The Destruction of Atlantis by Ignatius Donnelly

This classic book was written over 100 years ago, and almost all researcher reference it. His conclusions, that a giant comet hit the planet at the end of the last Ice Age match the new book recently released by Graham Hancock, Magicians of the Gods.

This is written back in the days before we had institutionalized academic research, and people used logic and evidence to argue their cases, rather than referring to "authorities" and previous academic research.

It's quite interesting to see how natural science has changed in the past hundred years. He makes a case that the soil deposits found in North America and northern Europe are NOT glacial deposits, but from a catastrophic comet. He then looks at various indigenous legends from around the world to show that people lived through that collapse, but it had a serious effect on the human psyche that continues to this day.

You need not have read the book to attend the discussion. This is an opportunity to reinforce what you read by recounting the material in the book to others, who can get information they may not have had a chance to read.
